Hurdling Adversity – Creating the New Normal

SUMMARY:

At Inspired Communications International, LLC, we see an explicit difference between inspiration and motivation. Motivation is fleeting because it is primarily rooted in emotion. Inspiration is the mental stimulation to create something different or new for us or for others. It moves beyond the emotion to action and resolve. Even though we don't feel like doing a task, the mere vision of an inspired outcome drives us toward completion rather than complacency. Inspiration therefore is a catalyst to desired outcomes.

PRESENTATION OUTCOMES:

This presentation is highly interactive.

Audience team members will be motivated to become more engaged at work, and walk away with the necessary tools to strike a healthy work life balance by learning four ways to overcome life's challenges. Participants will be encouraged to take ownership of their adverse situation (control what they can control) and be motivated to adopt "deer-like" qualities to hurdle their adversity, empowering them to create a new normal in their lives.

These outcomes are benchmarked at 30, 60, and 90 days through either self-identified, self-guided and or, company guided inspirational plans.
